Lawyer for Buying Property

When buying a property, a property lawyer is able to help you vet your Option to Purchase (OTP) agreement, while you carry out your own checks on the property and the seller.

After you have chosen your property and exercised the Option, a property lawyer will lodge a caveat on the property, carry out legal checks on the title and help you liaise with the bank, and if necessary, Central Provident Fund (CPF) Board, on financing the property purchase.

After the completion of the purchase transaction, IRAS will be notified that you are the new owner of the property. This will also be taken care of by the property lawyer.

Lawyer for Selling Property

One of the first things a property lawyer will do for you is to check on your outstanding mortgage and whether there are penalties for early redemption of the mortgage. If CPF funds were used during the initial purchase of your property, they will also check the amount to be repaid including the accrued interest.

There will be a notice to the bank for redemption, which is to discharge you of the mortgage, and if any, to CPF to discharge you of the CPF charges.

The property lawyer prepares proof of all various charges that have been paid up by you, i.e. your property tax, MCST charges, and other dues.

Sometimes, you may have purchasers requesting to move in earlier for the closing transaction to be delayed or if there are any other agreements that you have made with the buyer, these details would be drafted by a property lawyer.

Dispute Resolution & Mediation

Shareholder Disputes

Shareholders and contractual disputes can happen at any stage of a company's development and are particularly common in newer businesses. When shareholders or contractually-bound employees disagree about the terms of their relationship, the dispute can quickly become complicated and contentious.

Contractual Disputes

Our Corporate and SME lawyers can help you negotiate and mediate through the disputes for the best outcome. Our advice targets different segments within the organisation, be it the Board of Directors on corporate matters, the HR & IT team on employment & IT matters, or the Sales and Project team on contracts and agreements.

Insolvency Law

Our clients were minority shareholders without the power to control the company and deemed as Non-Parties. There was a fall-out between the majority and minority. The majority shareholder wanted out and commenced liquidation proceedings in the High Court.

If liquidation went in favour of the majority, our clients would have lost much money and reputation. DLLC acted for the Non-parties and successfully negotiated and resolved insolvency proceedings in favour of our clients.

Landlord and Tenant Dispute

Pre-Covid-19 business in the retail industry in Singapore was quite poor. Our clients were global players in multiple markets and industries and they were ready to exit from their current premises. They had a dispute with their landlord.

The landlord sued for rental outstanding because the premises were not properly reinstatement. DLLC successfully negotiated and mediated for a well-known global brand – issue of vacant possession – client benefited with avoiding lengthy litigation and walked away from paying any further amount and saved at least $500,000.00.
